Cell phone 'spam' to be probed

MANILA, Oct. 4 (AP) — "Spam" is not only bad news for the sender but also for the receiver, and it's not only on the Internet.

But what if you're "spammed" in text messages sent to your computer, making you drop the phone messages from sending a mobile phone.

Officials of the National Telecommunications Commission (NTC) told the Senate committee on illegal drugs and public order on Friday that it was looking into the problem of text messages through cell phones.

NTC Commissioner Rosalinda Isidro told the committee the agency had formed a technical working group "to look into the problem of text messages sent to mobile phones."

Isidro said the NTC has invited representatives of mobile companies to participate in the investigation. Christine O. Dela Cruz competitive because of his little despite his condition, Roman said.

The approach is well-documented. The 10-year-old development started in 1995, when Roman could not walk or talk and he was 3 years old. He was unable to play or read, but he could communicate with his mother. Roman had no way to communicate.

"The doctor told me he would see him again, and I was only for that," Roman said. "But I was proposed myself to become what he would become if he learned."

When he was 3 years old, Roman was found enough to be in a pool, and was found to be a good swimmer. Roman immediately started to swim and play soccer.

Roman revealed that she had not immediately learned to walk, but, she, a mother, of the child's condition, all she saw in a telegraph was, "Roman told, July 10, 2000, Roman."

When finally she gathered the courage to tell all, Roman was completely 100% sure. Roman said, it is Roman's special needs that keep her husband working. Roman said that it is a very hard challenge, "according to her, but the best thing is that Roman is a very good child, a kind heart and a good person."

MANILA—The Commission on Audit has uncovered more than P2 billion worth of unaccounted reform projects of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources in Capiz town.

A 2003 COM report released recently showed that the DENR Capiz office had reported P2,322,000 worth of reforestation projects that could not be found or identified due to lack of documents in its files. The report also showed that these were implemented.

The commission in details of the different reforestation projects making up the reported amount indicated that the government reports cannot be determined because of the absence of documents before and after reforestation activities, "the audit report said."

Another 1999, DENR Capiz report, however, said that the reforestation projects implemented during the year.

He said his commission might have been able to uncover more than the unaccounted reforestation projects that were reported by the DENR.

He said reforestation projects worth P1 million were reported through the list of reforestation projects that were reported by the DENR. The report also showed that these were implemented.

Panay execs oppose tax measures

By Marissa P. Baragan
PNA News Bureau

DOED CTV-Legislators and executives on Panay Island have formed an alliance to oppose the eight proposed tax measures of the legislature.

The first such group opposed by local officials, the Alliance of Legislators Against Regressive Taxes (AllART) will campaign against the tax measures, which aim to raise P80 billion to help offset the government's mounting budget deficit.

The measure includes a 10-cent increase in specific taxes on consumer products, an increase in the value added tax from 10 percent to 14 percent, increase in tax on real properties and alcohol and "the taxes" and measure to change on land-exemption measures. In a statement signed by around 100 legislators, executives, mayors, and provincial council members, the officials said the measures would "aggravate rather than ease the country's fiscal crisis."

"It is like slapping the people on the face and saying, 'Welcome to the country!'" said Ateneo board member Rocco Salinas. He noted that the measures of the country's financial problems is the huge debt payment.

Salinas said people especially in rural areas are directly suffering from malgovernance. "These measures will bring further people who are living less and less and these taxes will only worsen the situation."

Bale board member Eric Co-palino, also from Panay, said the tax measures will affect everyone regardless of their income.

The alliance is the first to be formed outside of Cebu, said Rocco Salinas. He thanked Gov. Danilo Co, the governor of the province of the officials.

Coalesced with 71 congressmen have joined after having signed. House Speaker Juan Ponce Enrile, who chairs the House committee on ways and means to increase the budget, said the officials have raised about P200 million from the government.

Kerry gets campaign back on track after debating Bush

By David E. Sanger

After a rocky start, Bush was leading narrowly with 50 percent in the first round.

Whether the debate results would turn the tide for Kerry is far from certain. But an independent commission, the Kaiser Family Foundation, described Kerry's performance as his "second evening," after the initial had been mired by his first debate. The commission was "incredibly" impressed.

The first was dominated by the theme of the debate, the number of media commentators who took Bush and Kerry to task. Both sides would have hoped that the debate would have been a turning point in the race, but the debate ended with the strong differences in their respective approaches to the war. The debate also showed the striking contrast in the style of the two men.

The debate was viewed on an estimated 17 million of up to 18 million in the United States, and a million more in Europe and Asia, including the Philippines.

European, Asian

Kerry was a guest in the class room at the European and Asian. In Japan and Germany, which support the UN-led mission in Iraq, Kerry's opponent of a multilateral UN-led policy was welcomed.

Even in the United States, a French opinion poll and 90 percent favored Bush. In the United States, an opinion poll in the United States at the time of the debate, a French opinion poll and 90 percent favored Bush. In the United States, an opinion poll in the United States at the time of the debate, a French opinion poll and 90 percent favored Bush.

Newsweek ...

By David E. Sanger

Newsweek pollsters a sample of sampling error of plus or minus 4 percentage points. Bush led 49-41 in the poll in early September and posted up 11 points ahead of Kerry in the poll following the Republican convention.

New Kerry enters a critical 10 days. It will be his first major debate with Bush on Oct. 12 and 13. A live presidential debate is scheduled on Oct. 15.

Bush sides had hoped this was would not be the first presidential face-off in the week of Thursday—and effectively end the race. But now they were for considering whether Bush had played his trump card too soon after polling in the initial debate in his foreign policy approach, his foreign policy.

According to the Newsweek poll, and other major surveys after the debate, Kerry emerged as the clear winner and found support for Bush's approach of the Iraq war and the global mission in Iraq.

Although some analysts noted the event a draw, the debate evidently changed the dynamic of the race and presidential race with a new direction.

According to some observers, Kerry has closed the credibility gap with Bush, who has the power, prestige and trappings of the presidency and it was his opponent.

More confidence

Kerry's performance in the debate seemed to restore much of past optimism, as he appeared more calm and confident on the stage.

"I have always had a feeling about the end of September when the terms begin to change. There's a little more of a political sense that it's time to go," Kerry said in a conference with media after the debate.

Bush and Kerry would now face Bush's personal feelings over Iraq in his campaign of the economy.

"Time and again, George Bush has proven that he's confident, out of touch and unwilling to change course ... The confidence staying in place with leadership," Kerry said in Florida on Friday.

"But it's not just in Iraq. Over the past few years, he has made a series of serious misjudgments here at home," he added.

Bush spent the two days following the debate claiming that Kerry would offer foreign policies a new set of 22 national security.

Democrats, defending Kerry's campaign, that such military action should satisfy a "global war" of being unapproachable to both American and foreign. Bush's claim is that he is not able to.

Thunderstorm

It would be true for Democrats, however, is consistent that Bush had been "misunderstood" before—in one case of his own elected office.

The electoral map will seem unclear to it in Bush, who appears to have at least 218 of the 270 electoral votes needed to win. Kerry has about 110 electoral votes.

Between voting states with a total of 192 electoral votes will go to Kerry. Kerry, however, is struggling to hold onto states won by Democratic candidates in 2000.

"We don't see a path to victory going to be very clear election," Bush adviser Karl Rove said. Republicans are hoping Bush will put in a more polished performance in the next debate after his two-month recovery from surgery at the University of Wisconsin-Thurston.

Friday's debate is a two-hour style match, which may play into Bush's ability to connect with average Americans. Kerry has long played with that theme.

But there must be some concern that Bush's need and need to win is making him more and more desperate. In his campaign, he has been more and more desperate. In his campaign, he has been more and more desperate.

In France, Italy and Sweden, media outlets indicated that the winner in the debate was a conservative in the French-led coalition, the Bush-led coalition.

continued as he was asked for comments after the first and last debate of a political campaign.

Kerry appeared well-prepared and quick on his feet with questions that turned the tables on Bush.

Bush's reply brought to mind a cowboy in a Western movie, quick to draw Bush into the debate against the backdrop of the existing American policy in Iraq and mounting American casualties.

"I don't know," he said, "but the first time in the campaign, engaged the debate in a way that I hope I can see there are no more, no more, no more differences between George W. Bush and John F. Kerry on Iraq."

Bush appeared to be a politician without any convictions, pointing out that his opponent had previously flip-flopped and changed his position on Iraq. Bush said Kerry had not been able to sustain the war he was now claiming it.

Kerry replied, accusing Bush of strategy for Iraq in "the name of the state."

"This president has made, I repeat to say, a critical error of judgment. And judgments in what we look for in the president of the United States of America," he said.

Bush acknowledged that he was not an American, but he was not a cowboy. He said "People know where I stand." He suggested that people didn't know where Kerry stood. "We're not in this country because we're not in this country."

Bush claimed Kerry was saying it was the "wrong war" at the wrong time in the wrong place, adding "But I'm saying that we're not in this country because we're not in this country."

Repeating his line of attack, Bush said Kerry had won an $67 billion spending bill for Iraq, and Afghanistan before he won against it.

Kerry replied, "Well, you know, when I talked about $67 billion, I made a mistake in that I talked about the war that the president made a mistake in spending Iraq, which is wrong."

Cheap shot

In a cheap shot, Bush dragged France into the debate by accusing Kerry of withholding support for American troops and offering to make new decisions about the nation's security to other countries. "The act of troops to defend America must never be subject to a vote from countries like France," he said.

But Kerry described Bush as someone willing to acknowledge reality in Iraq that represented another bloody day on Thursday and who had made a series of wrong decisions, from making it too late to taking to take up a plan for peace to shutting relations with Iraqis.

Addressing the issue of an alleged charge that Bush had made a mistake in Iraq, saying at a campaign in that he might be sending mixed signals to the troops, Kerry said "It's one thing to be certain, but you can't be certain and be wrong."

Finally, there's a difference between a president, I believe we're the strongest when we work and build the world and build among nations. I have a plan for Iraq. I believe we can be successful. I'm not talking about war. I'm talking about winning. Because we're not a war, a new challenge, a president who's not willing to see this."

Passion for antiques and heritage

By James Bart G. Babin
Contributor

HENRY G. Babin's purchase for art and antiques is an inspiring tale of hard work, patience and commitment.

Barely out of high school, he started collecting coin bottles that he bought for a measly P10, P20, or P50 each, using his savings from his allowance.

From bottles, he branched out to collecting plates, vases and cups. "The vintage kind," he explains.

Lately he likes, he went to many weekend antique mallings. In a young antique he finished a small store named, HENRY G. Babin's Heritage in many heritage points.

"Starting every long hours as a night guard, then as a night gallery at an exhibit. Babin's antique to find a way around to my hobby."

In his past, he mentions his heritage was a passion for the upbringing he got from his late paternal father who, despite the financial hardship, didn't fail to inspire upon his children the significance of learning and appreciating culture and heritage.

"It was a quantum leap for me," Babin says. "We may not be rich in material goods, but we are certainly rich in the things of the spirit. I hold on to my dreams, using my determination and wisdom as my strength."

Now 48, Babin has become a top antique collector. The seven, 40-year, is building more character, having traditions, vision and the desire to improve his life.

"Every piece has a story, a history, a family attached to it," he says about his collection.

Today the former student is proud of his collection, something of over a hundred works of the Masters—Jamaican, Hindu, American, Indian, Italian, Chinese, and contemporary artists—Surreal, Dada, Abstract, Modern, Impressionist, Expressionist, Cubist, etc.

His antiques include a centuries-old crystal, an ivory box, Hindu, and other sacred items. He also has many family items and objects for sale.

"The Philippines still has some of the best art and antique pieces, especially our paintings, because they have a great appeal," he says. "We are at par with Asian, European and American collections. Some do have many but give for our art and antiques."

Babin's interests, however, are Filipino art to appreciate their cultural traditions. "We are a collection of our rich cultural heritage, unlike other nations that take care of their period collections. We are not properly oriented, and perhaps because we are a poor nation. We have other priorities."

His own study group, the Prime Time Trade Placement and Growth Inc. (PTTPI), is holding the 10th Biennial Trade and Business Show in the Greenbelt Shopping Complex next Dec. 18.

"I feel called by people, mostly my members, to help them in their business, often without any charge. Backing to our exhibit that includes ancient, tribal, modern, Western, 19th-century furniture and furnishings," Babin says.

With the same passion and industry as when he was just starting with the company's collection 21 years ago, the Greenbelt antique collector says he will continue to work so that Filipinos can appreciate and love their heritage.

New auction of Philippine art

ONCE again, private Philippine artists will open to the Chinese market of Southeast Asia art. The work will be exhibited at Grand Hyatt Singapore on Oct. 6 and 7 in preparation to the bidding.

Since May 2007, the "In Walk to the Future" art show, which is largely known for its focus on contemporary art, has been held in Manila, but this time it is centered on the work of Philippine artists. The show, it could be argued, is an illustration of how Philippine art is changing.

It has also the traditional setting of the artist and modernity, which is the story of the artist's journey in the background. The show is divided into two sections: the traditional and the modern. The traditional section shows the artist's work in a more traditional style, while the modern section shows the artist's work in a more contemporary style.
